Brynn Cameron says Blake Griffin embarrassed his family by "publicly fawning" over Kendall Jenner.

Are Blake Griffin and Kendall Jenner an item?

Though neither party has publicly confirmed romance rumors, a new lawsuit suggests that not only are they seeing each other, but Griffin allegedly left his family to be with the model/reality TV star.

In a new palimony suit filed on Valentine's Day, Griffin's ex-fiancée Brynn Cameron — who shares two children with Griffin — accuses her ex of abandoning them and "cruelly embarrassing his family with his public fawning over Kendall Jenner," TMZ reports. Cameron and Griffin were in an on again/off again relationship for 8 years, and Cameron says that, though they were engaged, Griffin called off the wedding shortly before he allegedly began seeing Jenner.

Cameron also brings up Griffin's recent trade from the Los Angeles Clippers to the Detroit Pistons in the suit, which reads, "Griffin himself, however, knows very well what breaching promises is all about. After all, Griffin had no problem trading Brynn Cameron, his former fiancée, and the mother of his 2 children, for reality television star Kendall Jenner."

Cameron, who's being represented by celeb attorney Bryan Freedman, claims that Griffin promised to support her and their children after she gave up her career to be a "constant support for Griffin," which she alleges included acting as his "personal assistant, meal planner, scheduler, stylist, publicist, party planner, nurse, nutritionist, branding expert, therapist, cheerleader, basketball and fitness consultant, and more."

It is unclear how much Cameron is seeking, but she says that Griffin — who signed a $173 million contract last year — leaving has left her and their children struggling financially.

"While Griffin is continuing to earn millions from his NBA and endorsement deals, Cameron and their children are homeless and cash-strapped," the suit reads. "In Griffin's absence, Cameron's brother [Jordan, a former NFL player] has had to provide Cameron and the children with financial support."

Griffin has yet to comment publicly on his ex's claims.
