In court documents obtained by RadarOnline.com, the Hollywood-based Collective Management Group claims: "After receiving career advice from his talent manager, Gomez obtained the confidence to land numerous roles, including a role as 'the voice of Bravo.'

"Then, after paying commissions to his talent manager for several years, without warning or justification, Gomez just stopped paying . . . and he has ignored every attempt to respond to Plaintiff's repeated demands of it's commissions."
